CONSTRUCTION AND THE COST OF money

New construction requires an investment of money - the longer the project takes, the longer that money is tied up.

Our modular system delivers completed, custom buildings in a fraction of the time, using modern construction technology and off-site building techniques.

The modular financial center opens months earlier. These extra months are time when your construction investment begins to make a return, rather than being tied up in an ongoing project

The speed and flexibility of modular construction allows banks to be agile, responding to changes in demographics and quickly taking advantage of new opportunities.

MODULAR CONSTRUCTION MAKES CENTS.

Speed. Whether you need to be first to market to take advantage of a new employer or opportunity, or merely are looking for a quick return on your construction investment, the accelerated pace of the modular system can deliver.

Flexibility. Demographics change, people move, factories close. What if you could react quickly to these changes? A relocatable modular bank can be moved and re-purposed. If a branch is under renovation, a modular bank can be used to eliminate disruption for your customers.

Controlled Costs. Trying to execute a growth plan can be difficult when construction costs are so variable. Wage rates, sub-contractor availability and spikes in material pricing can all sidetrack a project. By building off-site, we can control the costs of the structure and offer you a consistent price. Our volume purchasing and relationships with suppliers also yield savings in material costs.

Experience. For 65 years, Whitley Manufacturing has provided modular solutions. Our specialty is designing and building award-winning custom structures. The in-house engineering staff can work with your architect or create a custom layout. Our team of construction professionals works year-round, insuring that they are always sharp (there is no winter hiatus in off-site construction).
